PREFACE.

The Marsh library represents at once the special collections of a scholar, the reference books of a man of affairs, and the miscellaneous accumulations of an omnivorous reader in many languages. Thus, to remarkable fulness in certain departments it joins the character of a serviceable general library; while the fact that the books, on whatever subject, are in their original languages, translations as a rule having been avoided, greatly enhances the value of the collection for linguistic purposes.

The beginnings of the library were made early in the life of its founder. A volume of Sallust, published at Salem in 1805, bears the inscription on its title-page: G. P. Marsh. Phil. Acad. 1816. Dart. Coll. 1817. During his college life, which ended in 1820, he collected the classics of the Romance literatures, with the necessary grammars and dictionaries for their study. In 1824, during a journey to New York, he purchased Sicard's Cours d'Instruction d'un Sourd-Muet, with reference to his Report on the Education of the Deaf and Dumb, presented to the Legislature of Vermont in October of that year. At the same time he made additions to his collection of literary works in the South-European languages. His copy of Wieland's Oberon is inscribed: Woodstock, 1825. In this year Mr. Marsh was admitted to the bar, and took up his residence in Burlington. Soon after this, in the course of his legal studies, he was led, in tracing the historical relations of English law, to the investigation of its northern origins, and thus to the study of the Scandinavian languages and literatures. In 1833 he wrote to C. C. Rafn, requesting "the titles of a few of the latest works upon the literary history, bibliography, and criticism of the three Northern languages." In the same letter, he mentions that, not being able to find an American bookseller who had a correspondent at Copenhagen or Stockholm, he had been obliged to procure his books through Germany. This letter was the beginning of a correspondence which was terminated only by the death of Rafn in 1864. Mr. Marsh's Icelandic Grammar was published in 1838, though written three or four years earlier. In 1844 he wrote to Charles Lanman the following description of his library:

"My library consists of something less than five thousand volumes, and is such a heterogeneous collection as of course so small a one, if suited at all to the purposes of a scholar of rather multifarious than profound reading, necessarily must be. It is meager in all departments except that of Scandinavian literature, in which I suppose it to be more complete than any collection out of the northern kingdoms. In old Northern literature it contains all the Arna-Magnæan editions of the Icelandic Sagas, all those of Suhm, all those of the Royal Society of Northern Antiquaries, and, in fact, all those printed at Copenhagen and Stockholm, as well as in Iceland, with scarcely an exception. I possess also the great editions of Heimskringla, the two Eddas, Kongs-Skugg-Sio, Kunnuga Styrilse, the Scriptores Rerum Danicarum, Scriptores Rerum Svecicarum, Dansk Magasin, the two complete editions of Olaus Magnus, Saxo Grammaticus, the works of Bartholinus, Torfæus, Schöning, Suhm, Pontoppidan, Grundtvig, Petersen, Rask, the Atlantica of Rudbeck, the great works of Sjöborg, Liljegren, Geijer, Cronholm, and Strinnholm, all the collections of old Icelandic, Danish, and Swedish laws, and almost all the writers, ancient and modern, who have treated of the language, literature or history of the ancient Scandinavian race. In modern Danish literature, I have the works of Holberg, Ewald, Heiberg, Baggesen, Oehlenschlæger, Ingemann, Nyerup, with other celebrated authors; in Swedish, those of Leopold, Oxenstjerna, Bellman, Franzén, Atterbom, Tegnér, Fredrika Bremer, and indeed almost all the belles lettres authors of Sweden, the transactions of the Royal Academy of Science (more than one hundred volumes), those of the Swedish Academy, and of the Royal Academy of Literature, and many collections in documentary history, besides numerous other works. In Spanish and Portuguese, besides many modern authors, I have numerous old chronicles, such as the Madrid collection of old Spanish Chronicles in 7 vols. 4to, the Portuguese Livros Ineditos de Historia Portugueza, 5 vols. folio, Fernam Lopez, de Brito, Duarte Nunez do Liam, Damiam de Goes, de Barros and Couto, Albuquerque, Castanheda, Resende, Andrada, Osorio, also de Menezes, Mariana, Ponz: Viage de Espana, Navarrete and others: in Italian, most of the best authors who have acquired a European reputation; several hundred volumes of French works, including many of the old Chroniclers; a respectable collection in German, including many editions of Reyneke de Vos, the Nibelungen, and other works of the Middle Ages; in classical literature, good editions of the most celebrated Greek and Latin authors; and in English, a respectable collection of the best authors, among which I may notice as rare in this country many of the old Chroniclers (including Lord Berners's Froissart), Roger Ascham, the works of King James I., John Smith's Virginia (edition of 1624), Amadis de Gaul, and Palmerin of England. In Lexicography, I have the best dictionaries and grammars in all the languages of Western Europe, and many biographical dictionaries and other works of reference in various languages. I have also many works on astrology, alchemy, witchcraft, and magic, and a considerable collection of works on the situation of Plato's Atlantis and the Elysian Fields, such as Rudbeck's Atlantica, Goropius Becanus, de Grave: République des Champs Élysées, Ramus: Ulysses et Outinus unus et idem, and others."

This account gives only a hint of the valuable English library from which he drew the illustrations contained in his two series of lectures on the English language, published respectively in 1859 and 1862. It makes, moreover, no mention of the two remarkable collections which grew about his studies for the later works, Man and Nature,—first published in 1864, with its various editions, the revision of which occupied him until the day of his death;—and Mediæval and Modern Saints and Miracles, which appeared anonymously in 1876; while the meagre reference to his Italian library, contained in the letter quoted, gives no prophecy of the material illustrative of the language, literature, and dialects of Italy, which he collected with a view to a work never undertaken, an English-Italian dictionary, which should adequately present the grammatical relations of the two languages. In addition to this philological work inspired by his residence in Italy, Mr. Marsh had in contemplation a treatise on the Roman Campagna, for which he had gathered numerous books and pamphlets.

While it is clear that a large portion of the library was procured as material for his various publications, to some extent his writings appear not so much to have directed his reading, as to have resulted from it. In the preface to his edition of Wedgwood's Dictionary, he refers to his books as forming "a private library collected with no reference to etymological investigation, but only for the purposes of general culture." A feature that adds to the attractiveness of the collection is the large number of autographs of European scholars and men of science, contained in presentation copies of their publications. The notes quoted here and there throughout this volume were written or dictated by Mr. Marsh in his last years, as suggestions in preparing an auction catalogue, the public sale and dispersion of his library after his death being at that time apprehended. Otherwise the books are unfortunately devoid of annotations; his custom having been to mark lightly with pencil the margin opposite a passage or word that interested him, and then to note the number of the page on the last blank leaf or the inside of the cover of the book, sometimes adding the word referred to, but leaving the rest to his unfailing memory.

For the history of the acquisition of the Marsh library by the University of Vermont, it is only necessary to quote Mr. Billings's letter of presentation, which ran as follows:

WOODSTOCK, VERMONT, March 15th, 1883.

PRESIDENT M. H. BUCKHAM, University of Vermont, Burlington, Vermont:

MY DEAR SIR: You are aware that in September last I bought the library of the late George P. Marsh for the University of Vermont. I have delayed making a formal communication on the subject until the books arrived from Italy. They were kept there a while for reference in the revision of Mr. Marsh's works, and have only just come to hand. I now forward them, with a catalogue made under Mr. Marsh's own supervision. With the books already in Burlington, the whole number will be about twelve thousand, constituting a library rich in rare and choice works, and considered by those familiar with it of more value than any other known library of its size.

I ask you to accept it as a gift to the University.

When it is remembered that Mr. Marsh was a son of Vermont, and her most renowned scholar; that from early manhood until he went abroad in diplomatic life his home was in Burlington, near the University; that for a while he was one of its Trustees, and often expressed the wish that the library he had built up with so much care and pride should go to the University, and would have himself placed it there if his long public life had not kept him comparatively poor, everyone will see that this disposition of this unique and precious collection is the fittest thing possible. I congratulate myself on being permitted to make the gift. What other man had so good a right to the privilege as one who is not only a Vermonter and a graduate of the University, but who has had his home here in Woodstock for many years on the old Marsh homestead, fragrant with many memories, where George P. Marsh was born and lived until manhood?

And now the need of the University for a fire-proof library building, which has been pressing for so many years, can no longer be put aside. It would be almost criminal to allow the very valuable library thus enriched by the Marsh collection to run any further risk of destruction or damage. A substantial and graceful building, a fit home for such a library, should be built without delay. As the University has no funds to devote to the purpose, and as no time should be lost, I give seventy-five thousand dollars to secure such a building. I do this in grateful appreciation of my Alma Mater, the Alma Mater of two of my brothers, and in the hope that others of her children will remember her with gifts and help her to add to her old renown, and ever be worthy of her name.

Sincerely yours,

FREDERICK BILLINGS.

The first home of the Marsh library was the brick building described in Lanman's Letters from a Landscape Painter, which adjoined the residence of Mr. Marsh on the corner of Church and Pearl streets, in Burlington. This was a fire-proof structure, containing one story, very solidly built, and said to have measured 18 by 34 feet. It remained standing until the spring of 1887. The books were received at the Billings Library in 1885, and, until the beginning of 1888, were shelved in the apse. Meanwhile the present room had been built at the back of the main reading-room of the Library. Its interior dimensions are 30 by 39 feet, with a height of 21 feet. Until it was finally deposited in these quarters, the Marsh library was never all together. The size of the collection, and its owner's frequent changes of residence to Washington, Constantinople, Turin, Florence and Rome, with the uncertainty supposed by him to attach to his tenure of office, made the storage of less used portions unavoidable. The collection as delivered to the University contained numerous broken or unfinished sets, the completion of which involved the expenditure of $2,000; the same amount was also expended for binding; these sums being additional to the $15,000 originally paid by Mr. Billings for the collection.

The books were first arranged on the decimal system of classification, after which a combined accession- and shelf-catalogue was made. Pamphlets that came together under one subject were tied up in bundles of convenient size, and each bundle was numbered as a volume; but isolated pamplets received separate numbers, so that the last accession number, 12,479, covers in this manner both volumes and pamphlets. An alphabetical card catalogue by authors and subjects was then written, and from these cards the present book has been printed. Since the collection contains few mere book-rarities, and since the catalogue is intended for the daily use of the officers and students of the University, practical utility rather than bibliographical minuteness has been the aim of the compiler. As a matter of economy in cataloguing and printing, long lists of contents have in most cases been referred when possible, to other catalogues, those found most serviceable being the continuation of the Astor library catalogue, and the still more recent catalogue of the Peabody Institute library, which, with the Encyclopædia Britannica and the works recorded in the following pages, formed the chief reference material of the cataloguer. The paging has been given for every work of less than 100 pages. In regard to the distinctive type of the catalogue, full-face has been employed for author and subject words, the latter being further emphasized by CAPITALS. Similarly, the repetition of an author-heading has been indicated by an ordinary dash [—] and that of a subject by a heavy dash [—]. Prominence has in this way been given to the subject entry, from which everything has been excluded not of a strictly subject character; thus, all purely local institutions have been entered under the name of the place as author, no distinction being made between governmental and voluntary organizations. As to the time involved in the work: the classification and accessioning of the library occupied six months, the cataloguing about twenty months, the completion of sets, binding, and marking of cards for the press about a year, and the printing another year; the whole work, including all the proof-reading whatsoever, having been done by Mr. H. L. Koopman, the cataloguer.

By the direction of the Library Committee.

The volume contains the following note by Mr. Marsh: "All the books in this curious dialect are important in a philological point of view, but they are unfortunately rare. At the end of this Catalan or Limousin Grammar, will be found a Catalogue of the works which have been written in that Dialect since the reign of D. Jayme of Aragon, the Conqueror, whose Chronicle of his own achievements (if genuine) may be considered one of the most curious Historical Monuments of the Middle Ages. That part which relates to the Conquest of Valencia was first printed in the very curious volume entitled OPUS AUREUM, containing the statutes and privileges of that city printed there by Diego Gumiel in 1515 folio, of which I have a very fine copy."
